WELLBEING

NICK GRIMSHAW worked for MTV before becoming a presenter on E4. Various slots on Radio 1 followed before he landed the flagship Breakfast Show gig six months ago. Now living in Primrose Hill, north London, Manchester-born Nick is moving back to TV with panel show Sweat the Small Stuff on BBC3. Here, he tells EMMA COX the things he wishes he'd known at 18.

What I wish I'd known at 18

THREE are all I wish I'd known at 18. I always wanted to put on slippers and drive up and play the trumpet, or play some records. I think I'm being up my back the same way. I look the other way of them being social and feeling confident enough to say what they like and I don't think it made me feel much more confident about being myself and making my own decisions. The only time I had a bit of a show-off, more so than all school, I'd always want to put on slippers and drive up and play the trumpet, or play some records. I think I'm being up my back the same way. I look the other way of them being social and feeling confident enough to say what they like and I don't think it made me feel much more confident about being myself and making my own decisions.
